

Statement on the Research Excellence Framework proposals

The latest proposal by the higher education funding councils is for 25% of the new Research Excellence Framework (REF) to be assessed according to 'economic and social impact'. As academics, researchers and higher education professionals we believe that it is counterproductive to make funding for the best research conditional on its perceived economic and social benefits.

The REF proposals are founded on a lack of understanding of how knowledge advances. It is often difficult to predict which research will create the greatest practical impact. History shows us that in many instances it is curiosity-driven research that has led to major scientific and cultural advances.

If implemented, these proposals risk undermining support for basic research across all disciplines and may well lead to an academic brain drain to countries such as the United States that continue to value fundamental research.

Universities must continue to be spaces in which the spirit of adventure thrives and where researchers enjoy academic freedom to push back the boundaries of knowledge in their disciplines.

We, therefore, call on the UK funding councils to withdraw the current REF proposals and to work with academics and researchers on creating a funding regime which supports and fosters basic research in our universities and colleges rather than discourages it.

Kaplan Dr Robert Plant Dr Paul Antony Hayward Professor Gary Lock	University of Reading University of Exeter University of Reading Lancaster University University of Oxford	Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London Member of the Institute for Archaeologists The latest proposal by the higher education funding councils is for 25% of the new Research Excellence Framework (REF) to be assessed according to 'economic and social impact'. As academics, researchers and higher education professionals we believe that it is counterproductive. We, therefore, call on the UK funding councils to withdraw the current REF proposal.

Referees comments are very important and one needs to be able to assess the quality of the refereeing. One can not do this if what is involved is tickiing boxex. Supporting many types of basic research is the way to get real breakthroughs. I worked for ICI for over 5 years, the scientific Civil Service for 3 years and I consulted very successfully for a USA chemical company for over 30 yearrs Chairman of ASET [Association for Sandwich Education and Training]

Ms Elizabeth Forbes Wallace	Cultural Astronomy Working Group, IYA 2009	I am an outreach educator who teaches an arts integrated approach to teaching astronomy mainly through oral narrative aka storytelling. So, my "two cents" may be just that. But anyway, this statement reminds me of a conversation I had at the National Academies in Washington DC recently with a Chilean astronomer who indicated that writing a proposal for a grant was an exercise to satisfy the reviewers. They needed to see a product worthy of funding. But, the astronomer said, that might not be what you find. In science research, like art, it's when things fall apart and all seems hopeless that you can see what is there waiting to be discovered. It is only my unfunded curiosity which keeps me in outreach, not the income. FRSC, C Chem
